12th & 13rd JULY 2014

Each golfer has their own unique way to swing the golf club optimally. When a player's biomechanics can be maximized and a golf swing developed that matches it, the swing become easier, less stressful and more fun.

Specific examples of players whose swings need to be adjusted to fit their bodies and alternatively players whose physique need to be improved in order to make the swing changes desired will be shown.

Day 1:

- The body in golf. Why is understanding the movement important?
- Technique, injury prevention, more fun
- The feet, hips and lumbar spine in the golf swing
- States of consciousness
- Set up and different assemblies

Day 2

- Trackman and ball flight
- Swing plane
- Proper practice
- What is a shoulder turn? Why is it important?
- The thoracic spine, neck and shoulders

Specific player examples on each topic will be covered in both days.
Junior topics and nutrition information will be discussed in both days

Sean Foley, arguably the hottest name in golf instruction, coaches some of the game's biggest stars; including Hunter Mahan, Tiger Woods, Justin Rose.

Sean's core teaching philosophy is driven by a passion to help golfers evolve into the best players and people they can be. He is renowned for his unmatched work ethic and ability to connect with students of all backgrounds - turning good players into great ones. Foley takes a uniquely scientific approach to instruction; incorporating biomechanics, physics, philosophy and geometry into his teachings.

Foley has twice been featured on the cover of Golf Digest, and in 2013 was ranked 2nd on their list of America's 50 best teachers. Additionally, Sean has been named to Golf Digest's Top-20 Instructors Under Age 40.

Born near Toronto to a Scottish father and Guyanese mother, much of Foley's boyhood was spent living with his family in cultural centers such as Los Angeles, San Francisco, Vancouver and Toronto. He is a graduate of Tennessee State University, where he played on the golf team, and majored in political science and philosophy.

Sean currently lives in Orlando with his wife, Kate, and sons, Quinn and Kieran.
